This here is the Mandarin version as a duet with both actors from the Jackie Chan with his Kung Fu Horse ǎ•Ž When the buzz around the upcoming “Jackie Chan Horse Movie” reaches a fever pitch, it’s easy to overlook the practicalities of a completely different racing venture: the construction of the new Monaco Grand Prix circuit. While the film’s stunt choreography promises high-octane action, the real-world project on which drivers will soon test their limits is already in motion, with groundbreaking slated for early 2025. The Principality of Monaco has long been a crown jewel of Formula 1. After years of negotiations and feasibility studies, the governing bodies of the sport and the state of Monaco reached an agreement to revamp the circuit. The aim is to modernize the track layout, improve safety standards, and expand spectator capacity without compromising the historic charm that fans adore. Track Length – The new layout will be 3.337 km, slightly longer than the current 3.337 km, thanks to added chicanes designed to reduce top speeds at the notorious Massenet corner. Safety Enhancements – Extra run-off areas, upgraded barriers, and a state-of-the-art medical centre will be integrated along the most vulnerable sections. Fan Experience – New grandstands, premium hospitality suites, and digital engagement zones will increase capacity to 25,000, a 30% rise over the present 19,000. Construction will commence in March 2025, following the completion of environmental and heritage impact assessments. The project is a joint venture between Monaco’s Department of Sport, the FIA, and the private firm Monaco Circuit Builders Ltd, known for its experience with high-profile motorsport venues.
