For professionals juggling meetings and family duties, the first hurdle is time. Pre-portioning juice into small, sealable containers cuts down on mess and eliminates the need for constant refilling. A simple spreadsheet of "juice type" volume per guest can be prepared the night before, allowing the host to load a cooler with bottles of Prosecco, chilled orange juice, and a few seasonal alternatives such as blood orange or mango puree. Guests love choice, yet too many options can stall the line. A practical rule of thumb is to offer one classic orange juice and one signature flavor. The classic covers the majority of tastes; the signature—perhaps a rosemary-infused grapefruit—adds a memorable twist without overwhelming the host with extra garnishes or extra glassware. Signature twist: One seasonal fruit or herb infusion, prepared in a small batch. Providing a single type of garnish—such as a small bowl of orange zest or a sprig of mint—keeps the visual appeal high while
