Chan's foundation was laid at the China Drama Academy, a Peking Opera school. This training emphasized discipline, acrobatics, and precise, stylized movement rather than the practical combat focus of traditional kung fu schools. This background is crucial to understanding his later on-screen persona: a hero who uses agility, timing, and wit rather than brute force. His martial arts are inherently performative, designed to be visually compelling and tell a story within each fight sequence. Several key elements define the practical application of Jackie Chan's martial arts: Environmental Integration: Fights are staged where chairs, ladders, shelves, and even a flying kick through a wall become part of the action. This makes the choreography feel spontaneous and grounded in a recognizable
