recorded with the county clerk. Key benefit: The buyer avoids postponing the closing date, saving potential interest costs on a mortgage. Caution: The POA must expressly include "real estate powers"; a generic POA without this clause will be rejected by title insurers. When a Maryland LLC opens a new office, owners often grant a senior manager a limited POA to sign lease agreements, open bank accounts, and appoint a CPA. The "Maryland Limited Power of Attorney" (Form D-120) allows precise delineation of powers and an expiration date tied to the project timeline. Key benefit: The business gains operational flexibility without exposing all partners to liability. Caution: Overly broad language can trigger "undue influence" challenges if the agent's actions are later disputed; keep the scope tight and documented. Maryland recognizes "springing" POAs that become effective only upon a specified incapacity event. Using Form D-101, a homeowner can name a trusted relative to manage mortgage payments, tax filings, and insurance premiums, activating the authority only after a physician's certification.
